

Feedback Note 2017

This note outlines the approach which the Selection Panel takes to providing feedback to applicants in the QC competition who are filtered out without interview.

It should be emphasised that the vast majority of unsuccessful applicants are clearly highly competent advocates. The Selection Panel invites to interview all those applicants who appear, based on the assessments received, to be close to reaching the required standard of excellence; however, the Panel does not invite to interview those applicants who, following consideration of the assessments, have no realistic chance of being recommended for appointment.

The feedback to applicants is based on the conclusions of the full Selection Panel at pre-interview moderation, rather than simply the view of the two Panel members who grade each applicant. The feedback aims to make clear what conclusion the Selection Panel reached on the applicant in respect of each of the competencies, except integrity. The feedback will say whether or not the applicant reached the standard for interview in each of the competencies. The feedback does not normally deal with the integrity competency. That competency is regarded as satisfied unless there is evidence to the contrary.

The main purpose of the feedback is to indicate to applicants the areas in which stronger evidence of excellence is needed if they are to succeed in a future competition. Accordingly, although the feedback for each section will normally start by reporting some positive evidence from assessors, any significant criticisms or reservations from assessors will also normally be recorded, so far as that can be done without breaching the confidentiality of the assessor. However, it is far from unusual for there to be no significant criticisms even of an applicant who has not been invited to interview. Sometimes the assessors all describe competence, or even a high degree of competence, but without consistent evidence of excellence, applicants cannot succeed.

Where an applicant has fallen well short of the required level in any competency, the feedback will say so. That applies to only a small proportion of unsuccessful applicants.

Neither the Selection Panel nor the Secretariat can add to the feedback provided to individual applicants.

However, if applicants have any questions about the general approach to feedback set out here, please email the Chief Executive at russell.wallman@qcappointments.org.
